From the Public Ledgers.

London, Saturday, July 6.

AN odd sort of a writer has started up lately in the Public Advertiser, calling himself Anti-Sejanus, who seems fee'd by some who would fain go set with a little pop—y if they could have none whilst in, tells us to their praise, that though the State Machine, when it was put into their hands, was terribly clog'd and disordered, yet public business has gone on in a smooth and uninterrupted tenor. Pray when was it put into their hands? Were they not always mere Journeym— under the Favourite they now cry out against? One would think they would endeavour to make us believe, that it was not they who had cobbled up the P —— under this same favourite's direction; and as if L— B— only had made it; and as if they truly were another M—try since that. Were they ever trusted by the fav—te with the management of the State Machine in their hands, as they call it? Were not they themselves always machin'd, or pup—, in his hands? This writer's insolence is quite an affront to the common sense and understanding of the nation. He asks, afterwards, should such men as these, be removed from the helm, to gratify the little low revenge of the Favourite? Pray, without the Favourite's favour, would they ever have been there? And without him, and implicit obedience to him too, could they ever have continued there?—Who placed them there, but his favour or influence? This is indeed talking like puppets, or children; or rather thinking the Public are puppets, and to be wire-drawn, and dandled, and twisted about so by every mushroom writer. Yours, &c.

UPON the 2d of July last, I went to the Rose and Crown at Wapping-New-Stairs, and called for some Grogg; the landlord, Mr. Middleton, served me. I laid hold of the bowl and took a hearty dig out of it; Sheela ni Ghigg (says Mr. Middleton to me) did you read this day's Ledger? No, says myself, but if you'll be reading it for me, I'll be drinking for you all the same time. So Mr. Middleton took up the paper, and without speaking one word more, read a very sweet and brave Shaughnaugh letter to me, concerning the making choice of an Irish Lord Lieutenant. O! Mr. Middleton, Mr. Middleton, says I, I wish the King's Grace would be reading the Ledger all the week, that his Majesty might know every thing for the good of himself and all his faithful subjects, but especially his Irish subjects. Whist, whist, you fool, (says Mr. Middleton) a King knows every thing, and more too. O! then, says I, if that is the case, here's the tother good luck to him, for I'm sure that his Majesty must know that many a bowl of Grogg I have drunk to his Grace's good health; and upon my soul I did so in the year 45, and will do so while I live, and a great while after. Hold, hold, (says Mr. Middleton) don't be speaking any thing about 45, for you don't understand that number. Pray Sheela, says he, do you understand any Pollyticks? No, my Jewell, says I, nor any other ticks but bed-ticks; and my wife has often told me, that my understanding in that way was upon the decline: But for all that, though I don't understand pollyticks nor pollytricks, yet I know that an honest Irish Lord-Lieutenant would please the humour of all the Shilealy boys, and at the same time answer all the ends of government; because an Irishman could impose more taxes, and raise more money (without murmuring) than any Englishman, not excepting a Chesterfield or even a Northumberland, names beloved and revered by all Teagues. But pray, Mr. Middleton, who wrote that same Skeevaugh letter? An Irishman to be sure, says he. Arra, my jewell, says I, what name is upon him? Why, says he, the writer signs his name Aristides. Upon my soul (says I) I never heard of one of that name in all Ireland: But pray, Mr. Middleton, what was his father's name? Why really, says he, I don't know whether his father's name was O Geoghehan, O Shaughnessy, O Brallaughan, or O Callaughan; but be it what it will, he writes like a sensible impartial Briton. Who should come into the room at the same time but Murtough Broad-Sword, the Old Limonier's man. Murtough, says I, I am glad that you are come; pray do you know any family of the Aristideses in Ireland? Aristideses, says he, what of them? Here, read this Ledger, says I. As soon as Murtough read it, he took up his crutch, and striking a devil of a rank upon his wooden leg, blud an nouns (says he) the sweet creature, drink a good health to him. None of your botheration (says I) Mr. Broad-Sword, but tell me the meaning of that same word Aristides; for I never heard of such an Irish name in my life. Why, (says Murtough) the rogue of a Printer made a great big mistake, for the right word is Henry-has-tied-us. Tied us (says I) what are we to be tied for? And who is that same Henry that pretends to have tied us? Henry the VIIIth, says he. This struck me into a delirium, until Mr. Middleton cried, cheer up Sheela ni Grigg, it's all of your side; for (says he) all that Mr. Broad Sword means, is, that in the 33d of King Henry the VIIIth, an act of parliament was made in Dublin, that the King and his successors are to be Kings imperial of the realm of Ireland, as united and knit to the imperial crown of England, and consequently entituled to an equal share of all the freedoms and blessings claimed by Britons. As to the word Aristides, (continued he) it is the name of an honest justice of the peace that lived at Athens, and in English signifies Jonathan Swift. Thank ye kindly, Mr. Middleton, (says I) to my six pen'worth of Grogg, you have added twelve pen'worth of edification, for which you shall have my custom another time; and so shall you, Mr. Printer, while you continue your favour to your constant reader, SHEELA NA GHIGG.

The YOUNG LION's COURT;

An Eastern FABLE.

BEYOND the snow-clad mountains of Caucasus, where the Ganges murmuring from his native rock encircles the lofty forest of Malgsbezer, reigned a young and generous Lion. His predecessor had left him engaged in a victorious war, nor did victory go over to the side of his enemies, young as he was when he took the reins of government; but under his auspices shone forth with greater lustre than ever. The world of beasts had long felt all the horrors of war; and the fairest fields displayed only such scenes as the Huntsman beholds when the expiring Boar lies foaming before him, amid an heap of mangled Hounds. Such was the situation of the forest when the young Lion, from the great superiority he had gained, commanded that the forests should be at PEACE. But no sooner were the alarms of war over, than those of faction were resounded thro' the wood. The haughty and insulting manners of the Goat, who acted as Lion's Vizier, gave offence to some, and the place of his birth, the cold mountains of the North, excited the scorn of others. But of all those who opened their throats against him, the tall-dogs of Squirrus, was the loudest. With the most cunning abuse, he reviled the Goat's country, and used every endeavour to inspire the children of the plain with a jealousy and abhorrence of their neighbours and fellow subjects of the mountains. His behaviour was narrowly watched by the Goat, and one time in particular, he seemed to have bid defiance to all decency and prudence, for he almost gave the lie to the Lion himself. This was immediately laid hold on, and the Mastiff was apprehended; but was soon relieved by the common laws of the forest. This afforded him a new topic, and he bellowed forth PRIVILEGE, VILLAINY, OPPRESSION and SLAVERY! When one day an old Weasel thought himself affronted, and challenged the Mastiff to go behind the hedge with him, the Mastiff went, and had almost got his guts demolished by an unlucky wound which the Weasel, whom he too much despised, had cunning enough to give him.—The trial of the Mastiff was now approaching; but as he had a mortal aversion to a certain fruit either round his tail or his neck, and his guts being in a pitiful plight, he thought proper to limp off to a neighbouring forest, to smoke himself, as he gave it out, with his young ones. Mean while the Goat took care to have his evil deeds exposed to the sun, and in his absence he was degraded and reviled. The imprudent and cursish resolve he had made, as it offered an easy victory, could not fail to strengthen the party of the Goat who, tho' he had nominally retired, still continued to act. But his overbearing haughtiness towards his fellow subjects, and his pusillanimous meanness towards his master's enemies, became every day more conspicuous & intolerable. His friends & partizans, many of whom had been rebels and traitors, were, by way of strengthening his party, thrust into every place of trust and emolument, while the antient and noble families of the Leopards, the Steeds, and the Elephants, the late fathers of the public, beheld themselves entirely cut off from the affairs of their country. The ransom money was not paid to the warriors, the enemy was not compelled to do justice to the dealers, the paws of the industrious were idle, and the voice of complaint was universal. In this situation of affairs, the generous young Lion could not but feel for his people: He examined into the causes, and he resolved redress. Let the wise be called, said he; why do the renowned Councellors of antient days retire from my presence? Where is Selim * the generous Persian Steed, that was the right eye and the right arm of my princely father? He is holding dialogues with the dead, replied the messenger of the King. Where, says the Lion, is the honest upright Leopard? He is sauntering about, it was replied, in the Temple of deceased worthies. Where then, says he, is the sagacious Elephant? He is contemplating, returned the Herald, the poor effect that gold boxes have on the great, and that gaft jewels have on the inhabitants of the forest.—Cætera desiderantur.

This Fable has a moral—and no doubt,
You all have sense enough to find it out.

Gay's Epilogue to the What d'ye call it.

MARCUS BRUTUS.

* See Dodsley's Collection, Vol. III. p. 242.

'TIS the peculiar happiness of the BRITISH nation, that the LAWS of our country allow EVERY MAN to deliver HIS SENTIMENTS with decency and candour upon ALL SUBJECTS of PUBLIC IMPORTANCE, and to lay HIS OPINION before the whole kingdom with regard to the MINUTEST PROCEEDING of government, in which he may be INTERESTED himself. As this is a privilege which I have for many years presumed to claim, I should be unjust to my readers, as well as to myself, if I continued entirely silent, when such incessant reports are daily propagated about a change in the administration, especially as an alteration of measures rather than an alteration of men, is what we are principally flattered with, and what indeed is the only thing which can render the expected change of the smallest benefit or utility.

The present situation of the kingdom, whichever way we look, is truly melancholy and deplorable: abroad we find nothing but jealousy and disappointment; at home we meet with nothing but confusion and distress. Those COLONIES which cost us such immense sums of treasure and such oceans of blood, are, by our own mismanagement, rather a disservice than a benefit to the kingdom; and those manufactures which we brought to such a degree of perfection among ourselves, instead of meeting with protection and encouragement, are treated with the most chilling disregard that can be imagined; and are suffered to waste away in wretchedness and contempt. Add to all this, that our taxes are every day encreasing, while our means are upon the visible decline; and that even the few advantages promised us by the late peace, are shamefully given up, or what is the same thing, are still permitted to remain in the peaceable possession of our enemies.

In order to restore matters to any thing like a tolerable situation, it will be absolutely necessary for the new administration, the moment it is appointed, to act almost upon a system diametrically opposite to what has been adopted by our present governors. 'Twill be their INDISPENSIBLE duty to take off all the INJUDICIOUS RESTRICTIONS which have of late years been laid upon the COLONIES; and it will be their invariable business to use EVERY means of promoting the INTEREST and HAPPINESS of our FELLOW-SUBJECTS in AMERICA. The encouragement of our plantation trade will enable the plantations to bear a considerable part of those burdens which have been contracted in their own defence, and in a very short time produce the necessary advantages which every state has a right to expect from a number of colonies. Nothing can be more injudicious than our behaviour of late to the people of the plantations: we established them at an incredible expence, yet absurdly imagine they ought to be exempted from every share in our national disbursements; and to render this conduct still more unaccountable, have clogged their commerce in such a manner, that now, when we begin to see the necessity of making them bear a proportion of our public load, we find them absolutely destitute of the means. Hence, utterly unserviceable to themselves, they toil for little more than a subsistance equally poor and precarious; and worse than useless to us, the only effects they produce, are fresh sources of anxiety and expence.

The next objects which will necessarily demand the attention of a new ministry, are our own manufactures; these it will be their business to cherish with the most unremitting assiduity and benevolence, because when we have untrammelled the commerce of the colonies, we shall have markets enough among the plantations for the disposal of our goods, and shall even engross the trade of all the French settlements in America, in return for the partiality with which the manufactures of that polite nation have been treated in this kingdom.

Having once found sufficient markets for our manufactures, and enabled our subjects to furnish manufactures for the markets, we shall easily find fresh revenues to lessen the enormous weight of national debt, which so many writers have justly enough observed, is sinking us into destruction. Fresh taxes, however, of any kind, should be maturely weighed, and never laid on, but in cases of the utmost necessity. To render them therefore as unnecessary as possible, a new administration, if it pretends to act upon patriotic principles, should immediately call in all useless pensions and improper grants; and instead of swelling the coffers of perhaps infamous individuals with public money, apply every six pence for the service of the public. The people of Great-Britain have been too long shamefully plundered by a set of harpies, who have first of all betrayed their interest, and then villainously fattened upon their blood. 'Tis at last time we should rouse from our lethargy, and behold the precipice to which we have been foolishly led, by the artifices of wicked designs of ministers. Every moment we delay perhaps sees step farther towards our fate; and God knows if it not be but [illegible]

A new ministry, if composed of real patriots, will also see that the national honour immediately obliges them to call upon France to fulfil the various articles, which still remain unperformed, in the late treaty of peace; and to insist, in the most positive terms, upon a speedy discharge from Spain, of the ransom promised at the Manillas. The sums arising from their quarters will be of so little importance to our interest than advantageous to our reputation; and the sentiments which we have hitherto manifested in relation to them, draws an equal stigma on our spirit and our understanding.

In another paper I shall point out some further circumstances, which I conceive to be the duty of a new administration: for the present I shall close the subject, through an unwillingness of tiring, among too much at one time upon the leisure of my readers.

INSURANCES proposed against LOSSES from FIRE.

ABOUT four years ago several persons having maturely considered, how frequent and destructive fires have been in this town, proposed to form themselves into an association, for mutually insuring each other against such losses; but tho' many people seemed willing, and accordingly entered their names, to promote so useful a design, through some inattention, however, no meeting of the subscribers could be procured, to digest the necessary rules, notwithstanding repeated notices were given for that purpose. The great loss which happened this morning from fire, and the probability that it might have been more general (had not Providence ordered it so mercifully, that the weather was almost calm) 'tis hoped will induce every man, who seriously regards his own and his family's interest, to think of securing himself against the sudden and unexpected ruin such accidents occasion, seeing no one can fore-know how soon it may come, or upon whom it may fall. All the former subscribers to the Friendly Society, and others who are willing to insure their houses in town, are therefore earnestly requested, to meet at Mr. Robert Dillon's, on Wednesday the 18th day of October next, in order to concert and frame such rules, as may establish so highly necessary an institution on the surest footing.

QUEBEC, July 25.

SINCE our laſt arrived in this city, the right hon. Lord Adam Gurdon, Col. of the 66th regiment of foot, and a member of parliament for Aberdeen, accompanied by Commodore Loring, &c.

HALIFAX,
in Nova-Scotia. Auguſt 22.

Tueſday laſt embarked on board his Majeſty's ſhip Thunderer, the 40th regiment, commanded by Lieutenant General Robert Armiger, and on Wedneſday following ſailed for Ireland.

NEW-LONDON, Auguſt 23.

We hear that a gentleman in one of the ſouthern provinces being adviſed that his ſon then in London, was appointed a ſtamp-officer, for ſaid province, immediately wrote him, that if he thought proper to accept that moſt deteſtable office, he muſt not expect any thing from him, and that he might never ſee his face more.

Yeſterday a little before night, the Effigy of J——d I——l, Eſq; late Agent for this colony, (but now diſtributer of Stampt Paper for the ſame) was hung up by the neck in the moſt public part of this town, having a young Imp of the Devil at his right ſhoulder, repreſented as dictating to him, & a Stamp-Act at his breaſt, under which was an inſcription in praiſe of LIBERTY; in this poſition the effigy continued about an hour; when it was taken down, and being fixt on a pole was carried thro' the town, amidſt the loud acclamations of ſome hundreds of people; this ceremony being over, there was a repeated diſcharge of cannon from the battery, and the effigy being properly fixt over a bonfire, it was conſumed.

PROVIDENCE, Rhode-Iſland, Aug. 24.

A very dangerous book is now printing in New-London, call'd the S—— A——. The public are advertiſed of the deſtructive tendency of its principles, being ſuch as muſt ruin the colonies if adopted.

Able jockies give it as their opinion, that the American horſes are of too mettleſome a breed to ſtand ſtill under the operation of branding, and that whoever ſhould attempt to apply a hot S to their buttocks, would be in no ſmall danger from their hind legs: For ſaith one wittily, Sure none but aſſes will ſtand ſtill to be branded. However the ſaid jockies will not aver that the few aſſes will give much trouble to the branding Company.

It is hoped that we may publicly declare, without the imputation of boaſting, that great œconomy hath got footing among us, with reſpect to European manufactures. The quantity is very much leſſened, and in the articles of cloathing, ſuch as are of a coarſer texture than what were heretofore conſumed, are ſubſtituted, and found to anſwer the end as well, and carry no diſgrace with them. Our own woollen and linen goods grow into high credit, and there is a general ſpirit for making cloth: The ladies, to their honour be it ſpoken, now eſteem it no diſgrace to turn the ſpinning wheel and contribute to the proſperity of their country. Great Britain may one day find the impolicy of reſtricting our commerce, as the neceſſary conſequence is an application here to manufacture our own goods.

BOSTON, Auguſt 29

Wedneſday laſt a ſhip arrived here from Leith, in North-Britain, had nine weeks paſſage. Sir Harry Se——, an officer in his Majeſty's ſervice on this continent, came paſſenger; as alſo a number of other perſons. At the ſight of this ſhip, great numbers of people were aſſembled on the long-wharf, in expectation of its being Deverſon from London, who, it is ſaid, has the ſtamped papers on board.

It is ſaid Mr. Oliver will land the ſtamped papers at the caſtle, and that he will not diſtribute them, unleſs the general court ſhall deſire it.—Quere, What have the general court to do with the ſtamp-office?

Some very judicious perſons are of opinion, that the wiſdom of the Britiſh parliament will never order any meaſures to enforce an act, utterly irreconcileable to the friends, not of a part only as was the caſe of the cyder act in England, but the WHOLE PEOPLE of America.

To attempt the enforcement of an act on the colonies by military ſtrength, would tend to deſtroy their uſefulneſs to the mother country—Commercial intereſts muſt in a great meaſure, if not totally ceaſe—And, beſides, a colony of ſoldiers is, in effect, no colony at all.

We dare almoſt promiſe our readers, and ſhall endeavour we ſhall be able to perform it, that within a fortnight by a ſingle article of intelligence, upon the beſt authority, we ſhall diffuſe among his Majeſty's American ſubjects a general joy, equal to the reſignation of a STAMP-OFFICER, or even the repeal of the STAMP ACT itſelf.

Capt. Deverſon in a ſhip from London, is hourly expected to arrive here. 'Tis ſaid he has the ſtamp paper on board for this and the other New-England governments, which, we hear, exceeds forty tons.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 2.

About twilight laſt Monday, a ſmall bonfire appeared to be kindled in King-ſtreet, and ſurrounded only by a few boys and children; but one of the Fire-Wards perceiving it to riſe to a dangerous height, interpoſed and uſed his endeavours to extinguiſh or at leaſt to demoliſh it; in which ſalutary attempt, after ſeveral whiſpers from a perſon unknown, warning him of danger, he received a blow, and ſuch tokens of inſult and outrage, as obliged him to deſiſt and take his departure.

Soon after this, day-light being ſcarce in, the fire gradually decaying, a peculiar whoop and whiſtle was obſerved to be ſounded from various quarters, which inſtantaneouſly drew together a number of diſguiſed Ruffians, (for this appellation we hope not improperly applied,) armed with clubs, ſtaves, &c. No ſooner were they aſſembled, than attack was made on the dwelling-houſe of William Story, Eſq; oppoſite the north ſide of the Court-Houſe; the lower part of which, being his office as Deputy-Regiſter of the court of Vice-Admiralty, was in a few minutes laid open: The public files and records of that court, Mr. Story's private papers, books of accompts, &c. expoſed to ravage and deſtruction, and improved as fuel to revive the expiring flames: Little more than half an hour ſufficed them here, for it ſeems much greater exploits were reſerved for the heroiſm of the night.

Boiſterous and intrepid, from this firſt object of their rage, they ruſhed onward, encreaſing ſtill in number and fury, to the new and elegantly finiſhed building of Benjamin Hallowell, jun. Eſq; where, after tearing down the fences, breaking the windows, &c. they at length entered the houſe, and in the moſt ſavage and deſtructive manner broke and abuſed his furniture, chairs, tables, deſk, glaſſes, china, and in ſhort every thing they could lay their hands on; at the ſame time purloining his money, and diſperſing his private books and papers, until by the effect of wine and the other ſtores of his cellar, they ripened into ebriety and madneſs, and became fit for the next, more deſolating and barbarous operation.

Towards ten o'clock they were traced by the noiſe and tumult of a numerous and confuſed rabble to the manſion-houſe of his honour the Lieutenant-Governor. This ſeemed to be reſerved for the utmoſt violence of their diabolical phrenzy; for immediately on the word given, that large and ſtately edifice became a prey to the iron hand of outrage and robbery; for in a few hours the houſe was a meer ſkeleton, and deprived of furniture, every wainſcot and partition, broke, hacked and mangled: And the whole by break of day, at once a ſad ſpectacle of indignation and wonder!

In this violent and extraordinary deſolation, beſides the houſe and it's furniture of very conſiderable value, his honour and his family ſuſtained the loſs of between eight and nine hundred pounds ſterling in caſh, all his plate, wearing apparel, a valuable and coſtly library, a great number of private as well as curious and ſcarce manuſcripts, and beſides theſe, large files and records, occaſionally in his honour's poſſeſſion, relating to the claims and title of this province; all diſperſed, ſtolen and defaced, ſo that the damage in it's conſequences may be eſteemed publicly as well as privately injurious.

"To bear one's own misfortunes with firmneſs, and to feel for others," (the words on the occaſion of an honourable and worthy gentleman, who has lately taken his reſidence among us) is the part of true philoſophy; who then can bluſh, or be aſhamed of ſympathy with thoſe who have ſo ſeverely felt the reſentment of a miſguided and mercileſs rabble.

The ſufferings of the other gentlemen, tho' truly grievous, ſeems to be abſorbed in the greater misfortune of his honour and his family, their loſs being computed at near twenty-five hundred pounds ſterling, excluſive of the building.

The peace and good order of the town has been ever ſince preſerved by a military watch, which we hope in time will [illegible] days to allay the present strange and tumultuous spirit; tho' we would not be understood, not to distinguish this, from the truly noble opposition to the imposition of internal taxes, without the intervention of the respectable legislatures of the colonies; or an equal representation, which seems to be not only of this province, but the united voice of the whole British continent.

The town having an utter detestation of the extraordinary and violent proceedings of a number of persons unknown, against some of the inhabitants of the same, it was voted unanimously, at a meeting of the freeholders last Tuesday. That the Select-men and Magistrates of the town be desired to use their utmost endeavours, agreeable to law, to suppress the like disorders for the future, and that the freeholders and other inhabitants will do every thing in their power to assist them therein.

Several persons were last week taken up and committed to goal for being aiding and assisting in the outrages committed in this town on Monday night last; and 'tis said, some further discoveries will soon be made of the principal leaders in the shocking transactions of that night.

We have a report from Virginia, that upon the arrival of the STAMP-MASTER there, the gentlemen of the place invited him to a ball at night, and treated him with the utmost politeness, but after it was over they informed him, his baggage was put on board another vessel which was to sail for London the next morning, and advised him to take passage in her without delay, as his life would be in danger if he staid there another day; this advice 'tis said he complied with, and went off immediately.

We have various reports concerning the Stampman, at Connecticut, some say he has fled the government, others that he has actually resign'd that invidious employment, tho' oblig'd to conceal himself for the present to avoid the resentment of the people.

We hear the friends of the Stampman for New-Hampshire, in order to quiet the minds of the people there, and prevent their manifesting any marks of public disgrace to him, have engaged that he will resign that office upon his arrival there; otherwise they will then leave him to the consequence of popular resentment.

NEWPORT, September 2.

Last Tuesday morning a gallows was erected in Queen-street, just below the court-house, whereon the effigies of three gentlemen were exhibited, one of whom was a distributor of stamps, which was placed in the center. The other two were suspected of countenancing and abetting the Stamp Act ——Various labels were affixed to their breasts, arms, &c. denoting the cause of these indignant representations, and the persons who were the subjects of derision.—They hung from eleven o'clock till about four, when some combustibles being placed under the gallows, a fire was made, and the effigies consumed, amidst the acclamations of the people.—The whole was conducted with moderation, and no violence offered to the persons or property of any man.

Early on Wednesday evening, as four gentlemen, among whom was Martin Howard, jun. Esq; were walking down Queen street, a person, in consequence of a private pique, assaulted one of them, who soon disengaged himself, and retreated. The other gentlemen manifested some resentment in his behalf; but the return they met with, induced them to withdraw, and go to Mr. Howard's house. ——An account of this affair immediately spread among the people, a mob collected, and marched directly to Mr. Howard's; and not finding the gentlemen there, they shattered some of the windows, and went off; but not satisfied with the mischief they had done, they soon returned to the charge with redoubled fury, broke the windows and doors all to pieces, damaged the partitions of the house, and ruined such furniture as was left in it, the best part being happily removed out between the attacks. This being done, the mob drew off, and proceeded to the hired house that doctor Moffat lived in, where they committed outrages equally terrible, in tearing the house to pieces, and demolishing his furniture. The cellars of both houses were ravaged, and the provisions, wines, &c. destroyed and lost —From the doctor's, they went forth in quest of the gentleman first aimed at, who had luckily, by that time, got on board the Cygnet man of war, which lay upon the back of the fort. After this they surrounded the house of the then stamp-master; but upon promises of his resigning that office, they offered no violence to his habitation.—It was near eleven o' clock when they were about to perform this last act of devastation; but desisting from this they contented themselves with rendering more complete the ruin of the two houses afore-mentioned.——Next morning the stamp-master's resignation being publickly read, the people anounced their joy by repeated huzza's, &c. and the storm ceased.

The ship Friendship, Capt. Lindsey, sailed for England yesterday. Doctor Thomas Moffat, and Martin Howard, jun. Esqs of this town, went passengers.

Extract of a letter from Windham in Connecticut, August 30, 1765.

" On the morning of the 27th instant, a certain ever memorable and respectable gentleman, made his appearance in effigy, suspended between the heavens and the earth, (as an emblem of his being fit for neither) he was cloathed in white and black, with a view to represent the great contrast of his character, he once indeed, (to his praise be it spoken) when in public trust reflected honour upon himself and country, but now, O detestable change! has for the sake of a pitiful pension, basely undertaken to be the tool of oppression, and to spread misery and poverty among his friends and brethren of this colony, by collecting from them the small remains of wealth they are now possessed of.

Now as each Beast of Prey, tho' pinch'd for Food,
Yet spares his Brother Native of the Wood;
So holds he still close Union with the Devil,
To Virtue only and his Friends uncivil.

A little above him was represented the enemy of all honest men, with a piece of Stampt Paper in his hand offering it to him, but by his aspect appeared very doubtful of success.—Underneath was written these mottos, viz. LIBERTY, in Capitals; below, May this be the Fate of all Enemies to Liberty and Property. On the other side, Property; below, Behold the Man who prefers his private Interest to public Trust. They continued in this position 'till evening, when there was a prodigious concourse of people gathered, the Effigies were taken down, and carried through the town, attended by a large procession, with the loud acclamations of the people.—The procession being ended, the Effigies were consumed in that element which is the most proper to blot out the blackest crimes by an intire demolition of the object.

Extract of a Letter from Lebanon in Connecticut, Aug. 27, 1765.

" Yesterday was held in this town, a special court, for the trial of a certain criminal, late Ag—t for this colony: He made his appearance at the bar of said court, in the person of his virtual representative, and was denied none of his just rights of Englishmen, being allowed the sacred privilege of trial by his Peers, &c.—After a full hearing, he was sentenced to be taken from the tribunal of justice, placed in a cart, with a halter about his neck, carried in procession thro' the streets of the town, to expose him to just ignominy and contempt, and then to be drawn to the place of execution, and hanged by the neck 'till dead, and afterwards to be committed to the flames, that if possible he might be purified by fire; which sentence was immediately executed amidst a vast concourse of spectators exulting in the prospect of liberty. On the right hand of the prisoner stood the grand seducer of mankind, offering him a purse and hissing this proposal, accept this office and enslave your country, and 400 l. per annum, shall be your reward. His injured country, represented by a lady dressed in sable, with chains rattling at her feet, was placed on the other side, thus pleading with her base unnatural child —My Son! Remember, that I have treated you with the utmost tenderness, and bestow'd on you my highest honours, pity your country, and put not on me those chains; to which her ungrateful, degenerate son replied, in a label proceeding from his mouth, Perish my country, so that I get the reward: Upon the utterance of which, such indignant wrath swell'd the bosom of this venerable matron, that her power of speech fail'd; yet the sentiments of her heart appeared glowing in capital characters upon her breast, in the following words:

" ——— Heaven crush those Vipers,
Who, singled out by a Community
To guard her Rights, shall for a grasp of Ore,
Or paltry Office, sell them to the Foe."

Which awful, prophetic and parental curse presently took place: For as soon as this representative was exhibited sufficiently to excite a most abhorrence and detestation of his crimes, being protected by a strong guard, from the rage of the populace, thro' the whole procession; and after hanging 'till he was dead, was cut down and delivered into the power of his false friend and seducer, who according to his usual practice, chang'd from a tempter to a tormentor; placing his prisoner before it to a huge Pyramid of fire, and followed him immediately himself, with his mighty paws barring all the gates of this suitable habitation: Mean while the Heavens resounded with acclammations and loud huzza's! Nor did a weeping eye or relenting heart hinder or allay any demonstration of joy, which an ardent love of Liberty could inspire in the breasts of her most virtuous Sons."

Extract of a Letter from Norwich in Connecticut, Aug. 22, 1765.

" The noble patriotic fire which has lighted up in one place and another, and of late shone so conspicuous at Boston, blaz'd here with all the vehemence and splendour of a comet, guided by the dictates of prudence and decorum. 'Twas last night our reputable Stamp-Master, in Effigy, made his public appearance in this town, clad in a suit of white, trim'd with black, the gift of his native country, both as an emblem of his purity and innocence, and his sorrow and tender concern for this unhappy people. On his right hand stood the restless father of mischief with the Stamp Act in his hand, giving credentials to his all attentive pupil; the malignity of his heart was lively portray'd by the expressive cardinal knave at cards on his breast, accompanied with a cautious memento to all placemen, that * *

" When vice prevails and impious men bear sway,
" The post of honour is a private station."

Their appearance was becoming, and procession glorious, attended by such invectives, huzza's and disdainful mufic as are the pure emanations of injured freedom; after passing thro' town, our hero with his companion, was conducted——— ——— " in all the Majesty of Greece " to the height of a lofty hill, perhaps the highest summit he will e'er ascend; and there in complaisance to his fellow, committed to the flames; and a few loyal and very constitutional healths crown'd the night. "

CHARLES-TOWN, SEPTEMBER 28.

WE have now the pleasure to confirm the information we gave our readers in March last, " that SHIP-" BUILDING was likely to be carried on with " great spirit at BEAUFORT, PORT-ROYAL" as well as here, by facts; for, within a month past, no less than three SCOONERS have been launch'd at and near the town of Beaufort, one built by Mr. Watts, one by Mr. Stone, and and one by Mr. Lawrence; besides which, a pink-stern SHIP, built by Mr. Black, will be ready to launch there next Monday, and very soon after, another SCOONER, built by Mr. Taylor, ONE by Mr. Miller, and ONE by Mr. Toping; there is also on the stocks, and in great forwardness, a SHIP of three hundred tons, building by Mr. Emrie; and the following contracted for, to be built at the same place, viz. a SHIP of 250 tons, and a large SCOONER, by Mr. Black; another large SHIP and a SCOONER by Mr. Watts; two large SCOONERS, by Mr. Lawrence, and ONE by Mr. Stone: At and near this town, a fine large BRIGANTINE, built by Mr. Lebby, will be ready to launch in a few days, ANOTHER, building by Messrs. Dill and Russell, is in great forwardness, two or three SHIPS are contracted for, and a great number of SCOONERS are continually building: So that, as soon as the superiority of our LIVE-OAK TIMBER and YELLOW PINE PLANK, to the timber and plank of the Northern colonies, becomes more generally known, 'tis not to be doubted, that this province may vie with any of them in that valuable branch of business, peculiarly advantageous to Great-Britain.

It is said, that, at the approaching election of REPRESENTATIVES of this province, the choice of NATIVES will be one principal object of the electors.

The 35th regiment, consisting of only 100 men fit to do duty (the remaining few being invalids) and only three officers and about 20 privates of those who came to America in 1755, with their venerable colour honourably tattered, and so full of shot holes that they could scarce hang to the staff, embarked for England in July last, from Pensacola. The 31st regiment, which relieved them, marched in there the 25th of the same month, fell sick much in good health, and by the 10th of August were not above half able to do duty! This mortality is attributed to their arrival in the most unhealthy season, and having neither proper accommodations or vegetables of any kind, and fresh provisions not always to be had. Six officers of the 31st brought their ladies with them, four of whom died in a fortnight, and the place was a mere hospital at the date of the letter from which we have this intelligence.—Giles Phillips, Esq; who came from England to make a settlement at Pensacola (and was here some time) died there the 9th ult. just after he had taken up a vessel to bring him back to this province.

We are informed, that a gentleman, lately from England, who has lately set up a Pottery about 9 miles from this, has met with so good Clay for his purpose, that he scarce doubts of his ware's exceeding that of Delft: He purposes to make every kind of Earthen Ware that is usually imported from England, and as it will be sold cheaper, he cannot fail to meet with encouragement.

In many parts of North-Carolina, the people have set up Looms for weaving their own cloths, linens and stockings, and the example is now following in this province. In short, a spirit of industry and economy seems to have been stimulated throughout the continent, from an apprehension that the stamp and other duties lately laid on the colonies will soon disable the inhabitants from purchasing the manufactures of our mother-country.

The electors in several of the Northern colonies have instructed their Representatives, to enter into resolutions similar to those of the Virginia assembly.

Those that wish well to the STAMP-OFFICER appointed for this province, seem inclined to believe, that he will, immediately upon his arrival here, follow the example of Mr. McEvers, of New-York, by a voluntary and unsolicited resignation; which will soon be known, as he is hourly expected.

Last Tuesday morning, between 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning, a fire broke out in the work shop of Messrs. Townsend & Axson, cabinet-makers, the north east corner of Tradd-street and Old-Church-street, which in a short time consumed it, and communicated itself to two adjoining houses; but the Fire-Engines being early there and remarkably well played, and the inhabitants not inactive in giving all the assistance they could (there being providentially too little or no wind) the flames were soon prevented from doing further damage. A subscription was the same morning set on foot, to make good the loss of Messrs. Townsend & Axson, two industrious young men who had not long set up their business, which, to the honour of the inhabitants, was completed the same day.

Tuesday night died at her plantation at Goose-Creek, in the 82d year of her age, supposed to have left an estate of £. 30,000 sterling, Mrs. Sarah Middleton, relict of the honourable Arthur Middleton, formerly President of the council and commander in chief in this province. She had lived upwards of 60 years in this country.

The scooner Sampson, Capt. Turk, of and for New-York, from Pensacola, and the sloop Honduras, Capt. Ruffel, of and for Philadelphia, from the Bay of Honduras, both into this port to-day, in distress; the latter very leaky.
